

What will happen if COVID-19 comes to Gapuwiyak and nearby homelands?

Summary of the Gapuwiyak local coronavirus outbreak plan

Currently there is no COVID-19 in East Arnhem Land. But someone might bring that coronavirus into the NT and into East Arnhem Land. We need to be ready to protect ourselves and control the virus if that happens.

The Northern Territory Government, the Land Councils and Aboriginal Medical Services Associated of the NT (AMSANT), working with many local organisations like Miwatj Health, Gorr-däl Aboriginal Corporation, ALPA and East Arnhem Regional Council, have made two plans about what to do if coronavirus comes to the region. You might hear people talking about the 'Remote Communities Outbreak Management Plan' or 'Local Pandemic Plans'. These are the names of two plans which are connected – we will think of these combined plans as one 'local coronavirus outbreak plan'.

Each of the five communities and nearby homelands have their own local coronavirus outbreak plan, because local people will help run the plan. The people who worked on the Gapuwiyak plan are sharing this summary of the plan so that everyone is informed and prepared.

The plans might change if the people steering the plan make new decisions about the pathways to keep people safe. The last time new information was added to this summary was on 7 September 2020.

Goals of this plan

- Keep COVID-19 out of East Arnhem Land.
- Talking and listening to Balanda and Yolŋu about what is happening, so everyone knows what to do if someone brings coronavirus to East Arnhem.
- Plan for testing people who might have the virus, and looking after them until the test results are known.
- Plan for taking the people who have the virus to hospital in Nhulunbuy or Darwin
- Plan for quickly finding people who might have come into contact with the person who has the virus, looking after them and keeping them away from other people.

Who is this plan for?

Yolŋu and Balanda living in Gapuwiyak, Bälma, Baygurrŋtji, Bunhaŋura, Burrum, Dhamiyaka, Dhuruputjpi, Dhupuwamirri, Donydji, Gäŋgän, Gurrumurru, Mäpuru, Mirrŋatja, Ŋaliyindi, Raymangirr and Yalakun.

Who will steer the plan?

Police officers, NT Government Department of Health and the clinic will steer the plan. For Gapuwiyak, the Local Controller of the plan is the Officer-in-Charge at the Gapuwiyak Police Station. He will work with the clinic to steer the plan. They will lead five groups who have different jobs in the plan. These are the five groups:

Medical Group	Public Information Group	Transport Group	Critical goods Group	Welfare Group
Top End Health Service (Department of Health) Miwatj Health, Careflight	Department of the Chief Minister Goŋ-däl, Miwatj Health, East Arnhem Regional Council	Department of Infrastructure, Planning and Logistics East Arnhem Regional Council, ALPA	Department of Trade, Business and Innovation ALPA, East Arnhem Regional Council, other businesses	Territory Families Housing, East Arnhem Regional Council, Goŋ-däl, Centrelink, ALPA and others.
Test people for the virus. Lead contact tracing. Plan to have enough medical staff and resources. Get people to hospital and provide medical care.	Tell everyone what is happening. and what we need to do. Try to make sure the right information is heard, not rumours and misinformation which can create panic.	Help bring people who are sick, or who might be sick, to where they need to go.	Make sure we don't run out of things we need, like food, medicine, fuel and other supplies.	Support people who need to quarantine, including old and vulnerable people, and make sure they are safe and have everything they need.

What can we do to prepare now?

There are things everyone can do to prepare, now. If we do these things, and someone brings the virus here without knowing it, fewer people will get the virus.

What happens when doctors think someone has COVID-19 in East Arnhem?

What will the sick person do?

- Gapuwiyak residents will call the clinic to get tested. Homelands residents will call the clinic.
- If health staff are worried that person has COVID-19, they might take them to Gove District Hospital or Royal Darwin Hospital.
- If health staff are waiting for a test to know if that person has coronavirus, they will help that person stay in a room by themselves. This could be somewhere in the community, like at Goŋ-däl (the old police station), or next door at the GEC building, or the old Buffalo Boys compound, or at a house where health staff sometimes stay, or at their own home if it is not too crowded. We usually have to wait a couple of days to get the test result back from Darwin. In the near future the clinic might be able to do quick tests that tell us if we are sick after only one or two hours.

What will the sick person's family do?

- If doctors find out a person has the virus, health staff will start 'contact tracing'. This means they will try to find all the people the sick person usually stays with, and any other people they have been close to in the past few days.
- If any of those people look sick, Careflight will take them to Gove District Hospital or Royal Darwin Hospital.
- The other people who have been close to the sick person will be tested for coronavirus. They will stay away from other people while they wait for the test result to come back from Darwin or Nhulunbuy. They might stay at Goṅ-däl Accommodation, next door at the GEC building, at the old Buffalo Boys building, at a house for clinic workers at Lot 152, or somewhere else where they can stay in a room by themselves.
- Later, they will be taken to a place like a motel in Howard Springs near Darwin, for two weeks and maybe longer. Workers will bring food, drink, medicine and other things to their door. They can buy tobacco and other things online from shops like Coles and Big W, which will be delivered to their room. They will have TV and wifi, but will need to bring their own phones and chargers. No visitors are allowed. They will call to see a doctor or speak to one on the phone. They can ask for a Yolŋu interpreter to help over the phone or face-to-face, when they want to speak to a health worker or someone else. They are allowed to sit on the verandah for fresh air, and they are allowed to walk around a small area outside for 20 minutes two times a day.

What will everybody else do?

- If someone in a community or homeland has coronavirus, the police and Northern Territory Government might ask everyone to stay at home. This could be for a long time, maybe 14 days.
- This way of protecting everyone only works if everyone stays at home. If you leave your home or community, you might get make your family in another place sick.
- The police, army and many doctors will come to the community and work with Yolŋu organisations to help Yolŋu through this difficult time.
- Health staff will test everyone for coronavirus. Sick people will fly to Gove or Darwin Hospital. Well people will stay at home. If a house is overcrowded, some people might stay in tents.
- Food, drink, medicine and other things will be brought to houses in communities and homelands. Health staff with Yolŋu interpreters will visit sick people at home.
- Old people and people with chronic disease might go to Darwin or Gove Hospital, or to the Howard Springs place, to keep safe.
